What a London Correspondent Says About the Treatment of Patients at Berlin-Noted English Church Trial Ended.

PROF. KOCH'S WORK.

He Will Now Turn His Attention to Cancer, Having Finished with Tuberculosis. BERLIN, Nov. 21 .- The municipal authorities have allotted temporarily to Professor Koch five buildings in the Moabit suburb of Berlin for the purpose of aiding him in carrying on his experiments looking to the discovery of a cure for infectious diseases, such as scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria and typhus fever. Prof. Koch will also carry on his investigations into the nature and cure of cancer in these buildings. There will be accommodations for 150 patients in the temporary hospital. The Professor considers that his labors in connection with tuberculosis are firished.

The Berliner Tageblatt says: "The preparation of Professor Koch's curative lymph is proceeding rapidly, but the quantity required for hospitals and medical associations cannot be made ready before the end of January. The attempts that have been made to imitate the lymph justify the adoption of severe measures against the imitators. The lymph is now available for use in most of the Berlin hospitals. At the University Hospital the doctors limit the use of the remedy to persons who are trong enough to come to get an injection. All money realized from the sale of the lymph goes into the fund of the hygienic

The Berlin correspondent of the London Telegraph declares that while the treatment of poor patients in the hospitals is only half completed, owing to the supply of lymph being exhausted, a few favored physicians are treating from 100 to 150 patients daily, charging from £1 to £5 each patient. The correspondent further says that hospital patients are only half treated and then neglected, often in a dangerous condition. Some, he says, have been rendered comatose by the treatment and have been revived only by the use of powerful restoratives. One patient is reported to have lain in an unconscious condition and within an inch of death for thirty-six hours. Professor Koch, it is said. knows nothing of this scandal and is not responsible for it.

Bishop of Lincoln Found Guilty of Violating Church of England Rules.

LONDON, Nov. 21 .- The Archbishop of Canterbury has delivered judgment against Rev. Dr. Edward King, Bishop of Lincoln, who was charged with ritualistic practices regarding the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court and his obligation to obey the rubrical directions in the parish book. The Archbishop suspended judgment in regard to the Bishop's rubrical irregularities. The mixing water with the wine used in the act of consecration, the Archbishop holds, infringed the law of the church, but the use of a mixed chalice prepared beforehand did not offend the ecclesiastical law. The charge against the Bishop regarding ablution was dismissed, it not being supported by the evidence. ## Rochester's Bank-Robber.

UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 21.—Rochester officers took Moses M. Marks, who was arrested here last night, back to Rochester this forenoon. The amount of money found in the satchel was $24.659.25. Marks had never been in this city before. He said he committed the forgery and the robbery on the impulse of the moment, and had no plans as to what he would do when he got the money. He had often thought, he said, how easy it would be to secure money in the way he did, and had wondered why some fellow had not tried it before.

Deadly Duel with Knives.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 21.-In July, 887, John Pichett, a native mountaineer, killed his wife on Waldern's ridge. He was acquitted on the plea that the shooting crossing the river here on a ferry-boat, Tom B. Allen referred to the killing of Mrs. Pichett in a way offensive to Pichett, who commenced an attack on Allen with a knife. Allen also drew a knife, both fighting like tigers. Allen received thirteen cuts, one of which may prove fatal. Pichett was cut four times, and he died in a few minutes

Shooting His Brother-in-Law.

Rev. Pettit Removed to a Cell-He and His Lawyers Confident of a New Trial.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. CRAWFORDSVILLE, Nov. 21 .- Yesterday evening Sheriff McCloskey told W. F. Pettit that, in order to protect himself, it would be necessary to remove him from the hospital ward to cell No. 5, which is really in the jail proper. Mr. Pettit said: "All right; I understand the situation perfeetly." He then got his effects together, and after supper the sheriff and a deputy made the change. This cell he occupied when he was first brought here, but soon afterwards was changed to the place he has just vacated. Pettit does not talk very much to any one about his case, but still is very positive that he will come out vindicated in the end. He says that his "consciousness of innocence will bouy him up, come what may," and so confident was he in this belief that the verdict of the jury was like a thunderbolt from a clear sky. He says that he never before had realized what results wrong circumstances would bring about, and "that an injustice like this cannot last forever, because it is a long lane that has no turn." One of his attorneys wrote to his mother for him, telling her about the verdict.

The costs in the case are still being made out. The special venire men cost $1,285.80. This includes the pay of the jury. Each juryman received about $80 on an average, and their board amounted to $486.85. The attorneys for the defense are busy at work upon their bill of exceptions. It is understood that there will be over thirty excep-tions taken, and the defense are positive that some of these will give Pettit a new trial.

Changed His Mind and Came Back. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 21 .- In the early part of July Segal Smith, who resided with his family on a farm six miles west of this city, came to this city, sold his clip of wool, and, without telling his family, a wife and two children, who were with him, anything regarding his intentions, took a north-bound train. From that time until to-day no word was heard from him. He arrived in this city this morning from Bloomington, Ill., where has been during his absence. He claimed that he did not know why he left, only that when he saw the train pull up to the station he got on it and finally landed at Bloomington. Ill., where he went to work. He further said that he did not write to any of his family or friends, and his return to this place was as much a mystery to him as his sudden departure. He is now with his family and friends. Smith is a young man of good habits and not addicted to drink. He was in the grain and feed business in this city at one time, where it is said that he lost some money. This bore heavily upon his mind for a time. Smith's friends cannot account for his strange actions.

Sergius Stepniak, the Russian writer, who is expected to visit this contry on a lecturing tour, has an essay on "The Jews of Russia" in a London magazine entitled Free Russia, which, according to his own announcement, is the "Organ of the English Society of Friends of Russian Freedom." He shows the nature of the persecutions under which the Jewish subjects of the Czar are suffering, and gives some details that indicate his familiarity with the question of which he treats. Steppiak says that the edicts of 1882 which prohibited Jews from living in rural districts, and confined their residence to a few small towns, were not enforced at the time they were issued; and when the government determined upon their enforcement, in August last, it was prevented from doing so by the remonstrances that were sent to it from various countries of Europe and from the United States. But apart from these edicts, the condition of the Jews has been made almost intolerable by the action of the authorities in those provinces in which Jews are permitted to reside. For example, in July last, the marshal of nobility of the province of Moghilev summoned the chief men of the Jewsthere to hear an order of the Governor providing for "rigorous measures against Jewish depravity." After they had listened with bated breath to the reading of this order they were informed by the marshal of the nobility that he had been invested with new powers, and he warned them against the continued perpetration of the offenses of which they had been accused. He told them that they belonged to a quarrelsome and self-concerted race; that they were given to money grabbing; that they were disrespectful to the authorities; that they were constantly bringing trouble upon the people of the soil; and that, if they did not change their ways, they would be flogged for every offense in the public market place. When the Jews were permitted to reply they protested that they had always been well behaved and deferential; but when the accusation against them had been repeated they were peremptorily dismissed. Soon afterward a Jewish deputation visited the marshal of nobility to beg him to vouchsafe an explanation and to ask for what offenses they were punishable, but he refused to receive the deputation. The residents of Pearl street and vicinity, East Somerville, have had their curi osity aroused by a strange will, the provis-ions of which have just been made known. On this street stands a comfortable twostory house, located on well-cared-for grounds, and, till recently, occupied by its owner, Ezra S. Conant and his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Conant had three children, two daughters and a son. Edwin D. Conant. now a wholesale dealer in groceries, on Commerce street, in this city. The old man, Ezra Conant, was a wholesale grocer, and while he was a liberal man in his domestic relations and in the matter of church work and charities, was still diligent and careful in business affairs, and in time became possessed of a comfortable fortune. When he became of a suitable age his son, Edwin D. Conant, married, and his wife bore him a daughter, who was christened Callie. The wife died in giving birth to this daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Conant, the grandparents of the child. stepped forward and took it off its father's hands. Though they never legally adopted it, they treated it in all respects as if it were their own child, and with its grandparents, of whom it became very found, the little girl lived and grew up.

In due course of time Mr. Edwin Conant took to himself a second wife, who is still living, and has borne him four children, three daughters, still living, and a son, who died. At the time of his second marriage Mr. Conant gave his daughter her choice of coming to live with him or remaining with her grandparents, of which she chose the latter. off, were of great intrinsic value, and her The newly married couple took up their residence at the old homestead on Pearl street, with the old people, Ezra Conant and his wife. Not long after they had come there to live Ezra Conant died. He left a will providing that his property should be divided in thirds, one-third to go to each of his three children, Mr. Edwin Conant, Mrs. Henry Hadley, wife of the teacher of music in the Somerville schools, and Mrs. Carrie E. Stickney, now Mrs. E. G. Scripture. The will further provided that Mr. Edwin Conant, upon receiving his share, should immediately make over one-seventh of it to his daughter, Mrs. Blaikie. The only provision made for Mrs. Ezra Conant was that the homestead and its contents should be

The provisions of the old gentleman's will were complied with, Mrs. Blaikie received her seventh of her father's share, and, in addition, Mrs. Ezra Conant made over to her granddaughter a $10,000 life insurance policy which her late husband had left. Shortly after this Mrs. Ezra Conant herself died, and left to Mrs. Blaikie all her valuable personal effects. My mutual consent of all the members of the family, Mrs. Blaikie then bought the homestead and its contents at a very low figure, and she and her husband continued to live there. A few weeks ago Mrs. Blaikie began to grow very despondent over her approach ing confinement. Her mother had died in child-birth, as had also her husband's first wife, and she seemed to feel that she would not survive the ordeal. She brooded over her approaching travail until she resolved to make her will. Lawyer Orren S. Knapp, an old friend of the family, was accordingly sent for, and drew up a will in accordance with Mrs. Blaikie's wishes. On the morning of Nov. 4 inst. Mr. Knapp died very suddenly of heart disease. Mrs. Blaikie's fears and forebodings proved to be well grounded. A little over three weeks ago she gave birth to a son and died a few hours afterward.

When her will was opened it proved to be a very strange document. It provided that if her child was a daughter, she should receive all her mother's property, with the exception of her diamonds, which should go to Mr. Blaikie. But if the child were a son, all the mother's property, with the exception of the $1 necessary to legally estabjish the son's birth, should go to Mr. Blaikie After Mrs. Blakie's death, her aunt, Mrs. Scripture, whose home is now in Tennessee and who has no children of herown, legally adopted the child whose birth had cost its mother her life.

Mr. Blaikie is living in the old Ezra Conant homestead, with the two children which his first wife bore him. This strange will has excited much curiosity in Somerville among those who know the family, and there are many surmises as to the causes that led to its being drawn, The married life of the Blaikies has always seemed to their many friends to be a very happy one. What led to the drafting o so strange a will? Why did this young mother leave her son entirely unprovided

No Cause for Alarm.

Now even the importers are writing let ters urging Congress to make no rash changes in the tariff. They fought some of the items in the new law very hard, but be-lieve that a general repeal would be disastrous to the country, as it would unsettle prices and make everybody uneasy again. There is no danger. The Democracy couldn't agree on a bill to succeed the present law even if it had the power. The tariff will stand until it has been tried. The schedules can be changed from time to time as they are found to need it, but they will not | I WAS GREATLY REDUCED IN FLESH.

ness of this will weaken the cause he leads. Success may come in spite of this, but before the world Mr. Parnell has added one more to all the lessons of the past, that a man who sins after this fashion cannot sevarate his personal and political repute, but is left the weaker before all men in all things, because he lacked the strength to be stronger than his baser passions.

Nicknames and Popularity. Eugene Field's London Letter.

How came the British public to call the Earl of Beaconsfield by the familiar pet name of Dizzy? That is the question which we find going the rounds of the press just now. The answer would seem easy enough: a natural diminutive of the name is "Dizzy:" moreover, the foppish attire of the man, his dandyfied manner and the exhers during her lifetime, and that she traordiny mode in which he wore his care-should be properly cared for by the chil- fully curled and oiled hair would seem to server a singular appropriateness in the nickname of "Dizzy." Sir Stafford Northcote may have been the first to make use of this endearing diminutive, yet when Sir Stafford came to know Disraeli better or more intimately he made a practice of calling him "Dis." "There is no surer sign," says Mr. Fronde, "that a man is liked in England than the adoption of a pet name for him." Lord Randolph Churchill is commonly known as "Randy," and there is no gainsaying his great popularity. Sir Horace Davy is supposed to have given to Gladstone the distinguishing title of the "grand old man," but at that time Gladstone was in factan old man, and had never before been known by any endearing pet name or nickname.
